The destination

Heading to Bali and looking to experience the best of Balinese culture and traditions, the whole island is incredibly spiritual and majority of the Balinese are religious.

The Balinese people follow a form of Hinduism known as Agama Hindu Dharma. Balinese culture and traditions religion impacts almost every aspect of life on the island and draws people to Bali to see and experience it. An important belief of Balinese Hinduism is that elements of mother nature are influenced by spirit. Our Viceroy team proudly discuss Balinese traditions in this video, as featured on Access Luxury (Amazon Prime), as seen above.

There are over 20,000 Hindu temples in Bali (known as “pura”) – each with a specific function and rituality for the Balinese calendar year of 250 days. The different types of Balinese temples are arranged according to the physical and spiritual realm of Balinese Hinduism – from Pura Tirta “water temples” for cleansing rituals to Pura Segara “sea temples” that are located by the ocean to appease the sea Gods and deities. There are also village and family temples in Bali that are important parts of Balinese culture and traditions in that they provide places for the community to congregate and enjoy festivities. Check out what we think are the 7 best Bali temples to visit on your holiday.

To know Balinese culture and traditions intimately requires an understanding of the philosophy of Tri Hita Karana “Three Causes of Goodness”, which is the origin of the Balinese belief system. It is centered on maintaining a harmonious relationship with God, people and nature. Once aware, this becomes easily identifiable in the Balinese way of life, architecture, agriculture and tradition. It is believed that the wisdom of living true to these elements brings about prosperity and harmony.

Every important event in human life is always followed by particular ceremony, for example there are Balinese ceremonies for birth, puberty, maturity, wedding or death, then there are ceremonies on important holidays in the 250-day Balinese calendar such as Nyepi (day of silence), Galungan and Kuningan or ceremonies connected with natural phenomena (like a full moon). With these ceremonies and daily rituals, people are connecting with the gods, ancestors, families and community.

The offerings (sesajen) are made of agricultural products and are offered to these spirits daily. They are believed to maintain peace and balance on earth. The offering is more than a colourful hand woven box to locals and understanding this as a tourist can be powerful. Temples and rituals are part of why Bali culture is as special now as it was a thousand years ago, and as the only predominantly Hindu island in the Indonesian archipelago, it has such a unique offering for visitors.

Nusa Dua

Nusa Dua is located at the tip of the southeastern part of Bali Island, and about 40 km from Denpasar city. In the elite area of 350 hectare developed by BTDC (Bali Tourism Development Corporation) stand a lot of 5-star hotel and convention centers and it is not surprising, international event are often held in this area.

Actually, Nusa Dua was the name of two small isles separated by white sand. This tourist area is enacted to become the first area in Asia-Pacific Region gaining “Green Globe”, namely a certificate given by the Green Globe Certification for Environmentally friendly tourist attractions.

For those who want luxury and peace in the waves sigh, then visiting Nusa Dua Beach is very felicitous. In addition to parks and aeaa arrangement that is so neat, the beach is also brilliant with white sand like a bath rugs and blue silk.
